

OCT 24 1955

Ag 3-1

PETERSBURG (Va.)

PROGRESS INDEX

Sanitized - Approved For Release : CIA-RDP70-00058R000100020022-4

Circ.: e. 16,410
S. 16,694

Front Edit Other
Page Page Page

Date:

The Other Dulles Sees No Change

According to Allen W. Dulles, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, there is "not a bit" of difference in the way the Russians are now operating, with respect to intelligence and subversion, as compared with their pre-Geneva actions. In a television interview with a New York member of the House of Representatives, Mr. Dulles said he had no reason to believe there has been any relaxation in the covert field and in the field of subversion.

He knows of no change in such matters in Indochina, Indonesia, and other parts of the world in which the Reds are presently and particularly interested. Moreover, he rates the Soviet collection of data through subversives and intelligence agents as good, but their evaluation of data as probably not so good. He assured his listeners that American collection of intelligence at home and abroad, through the FBI and CIA, is second to none in the free world.

Mr. Dulles made it plain that he was not trying to assess any possible changes in the broad policy field as a result of the summit meeting. He would leave that to the proper parties to do.

It might be argued in behalf of optimism that it is too soon for changes to be reflected in such matters as intelligence and subversion, or that long standing habits are not quickly changed.

Possibly there is a time lag between policy and subversion in the field, but the one is closely related to the other. Until some changes are noted in this regard, it would be dangerous to attach a great deal of importance to the results of the Geneva conference. On the contrary, this would seem to be one of the first places in which any change would be observed.

Sanitized - Approved For Release : CIA-RDP70-00058R000100020022-4